

Corynne McSherry
Intellectual Property Director,
Electronic Frontier Foundation
J.D., Stanford Law School;
Ph.D., Communication, U.C. San Diego

Ms. McSherry specializes in intellectual property and free speech litigation, with representative cases including Chamber of Commerce v. Servin, et al (trademark parody), Lenz v. Universal (DMCA abuse), and In re Sony BMG CD Technologies Litigation (aka the "rootkit" case), as well as numerous amicus briefs on trademark, copyright and patent issues. In addition to litigation, she has also been deeply involved in EFF's successful campaign for exemptions to the DMCA's anti-circumvention provisions. She comments regularly on intellectual property issues in a variety of venues, including NPR, CBS, and Fox News' O'Reilly Factor, the Wall Street Journal, the Los Angeles Times, Rolling Stone, and Wired News. Prior to joining EFF, Ms. McSherry was a litigator at Bingham McCutchen, LLP, and wrote Who Owns Academic Work?: Battling for Control of Intellectual Property (Harvard University Press, 2001).
