

Matt Cagle (@Matt_Cagle) is one of a handful of experts nationally on facial recognition law and policy and a technology and civil liberties attorney at the ACLU of Northern California focusing on digital rights issues, privacy, surveillance, and free speech. Cagle works with communities and policymakers to end discriminatory and secretive police surveillance and led the coalition efforts behind San Francisco's ban on facial recognition and California's law blocking the technology's use with officer body cameras. Matt also has served on the Oakland committee that restricted a vast surveillance complex and created a first-of-its-kind Privacy Advisory Commission.
